>So we are literally going to group apps into buckets based on how scared we are of them and give them different APIs? How do we ever hope to document this? Put a link at the top of the page that says "Going to be building a messenger app? Click here to filter out the APIs we won't let you use!" And what if an app adds a feature that moves them from 2 to 1? Shit just breaks? And a messaging app can't use Facebook login? So the message is, "if you're going to compete with us at all, make sure you don't integrate with us at all."? I am just dumbfounded.

David Poll:

>agreed

Kevin Lacker:

>yeah this is complicated

Ilya Sukhar:

>Yeah, not great, but this already happens to some degree - e.g. Path isn't allowed to use certain things.

Ilya Sukhar:

>The absolute numbers in terms of who is considered a competitor are pretty small.

Bryan Klimt:

>Just because something already happens...

Ilya Sukhar:

>I know, I know, just saying.

David Poll:

>more than complicated, it's sort of unethical

Kevin Lacker:

>well, I agree it is bad

Bryan Klimt:

>It

Kevin Lacker:

>but, the solution is to not launch stupid APIs that we don't want to support

Bryan Klimt:

>It's going the wrong direction.

David Poll:

>also, every contact app is a pure competitor?

David Poll:

>*sigh*

Bryan Klimt:

>or ever messaging app!

Bryan Klimt:

>that's gonna make Parse chat-as-a-service really difficult to use. Using it will make you a messaging app, which will mean you aren't allowed to use it?

Kevin Lacker:

>no no no

Kevin Lacker:

>the key parse strategy is "island of quality"

Kevin Lacker:

>parse doesn't obey these terrible constraints

Ilya Sukhar:

>Realistically only the top 5 messaging apps will ever raise an eyebrow.

Ilya Sukhar:

>So, I agree this sucks but you are reading this too absolutely.

Kevin Lacker:

>do you guys want to come over to animal and we can discuss right now

Bryan Klimt:

>That feels unethical somehow, but I'm having difficulty explaining how. It just makes me feel like a bad person.

Ilya Sukhar:

>This is kind a political safety net internally that allows Platform to escape-hatch situations that the rest of the company isn't happy about.

Bryan Klimt:

>with whom?

Kevin Lacker:

>me and Ilya

Bryan Klimt:

>okay

Kevin Lacker:

>Ilya and I are just both sitting - yeah

Ilya Sukhar:

>Yeah we're just hanging out in this room both chatting on the same thread.

Ilya Sukhar:

>Hey guys, just FYI, I asked Doug to find some time to meet up. I think it's still useful for you to get his take.

Bryan Klimt:

>(y)
